Chiefs after a successful stint with the New England Patriots. If you are looking for the number two seed heading into the playoffs, then the Denver Broncos are almost certainly your team. After beating the Houston Texans last week, the Broncos are in a pretty good position going into the postseason. However, they face the second-seeded Kansas City Chiefs in a matchup that will be one of the most exciting games of the season. The Chiefs are in a similar position after a 3-1 record, although they can't match the Denver Broncos for star power. Maybe that will help the Broncos come away with a win, which will make them the first 7-0 team since the 1972 Miami Dolphins. The Broncos faced the Chiefs in early November after both teams won their first two games. The Broncos won the first matchup 27-14, but the Chiefs shocked the league with a 24-16 win in Week 3. The rematch will be the first meeting between these two teams, with all eyes and attention on the Broncos. Denver has been getting great quarterback play from Peyton Manning, who threw for more than 400 yards in all three games since the Chiefs beat them.

Manning torched the Chiefs defense for 8.2 yards per attempt, and will be looking to deliver big plays to running back C.J. Anderson, who will be facing a soft matchup at Arrowhead. The Chiefs have had problems with the Broncos all year, especially early in the season. Denver had an early bye in Week 1 after going undefeated the last two years, and looked slow in a 13-9 loss to the Chiefs in Week 8. Kansas City then embarrassed the Broncos, 34-10, in Week 9. The Chiefs had nine sacks against the Broncos, and played extremely well in a win over the San Francisco 49ers. The Broncos have been dealing with a slew of injuries to their defensive line, and center Manny Ramirez might not be available for the game. That means the Chiefs will likely have success on the interior offensive line, 3da54e8ca3
